Medium Bio:

An artist at heart, new novelist, Prissy Elrod lives in Tallahassee, Florida with her husband while her treasured family lives within four miles of her. Writing her first novel, 'Far Out of the Ordinary' was an exercise of courage. It took four years to write, three computers, two espresso machines, 48 how-to writing books, a Florida State University memoir-writing class, 24 blog subscriptions, a half-dozen periodical journals and 14 revised drafts. Elrod kept the manuscript to herself, not allowing anyone to read it for the first three years of writing her story and finally, in 2013, she sent the draft to a Pushcart Prize-winning writer in Texas, engaging him to read the manuscript and provide feedback. Elrod is currently working on her second book. To contact visit www.PrissyElrod.com or prissy@elrod.com

Long Bio:

Prissy Elrod was born and raised in Lake City, a charming little town nestled in northern Florida. It is known as the gateway to the South, an important piece of trivia everyone should know. She learned this when she was only seventeen years old, and it was not from Google or Wikipedia. Nope. She was a beauty pageant finalist, standing on a brightly lit stage in Jacksonville, Florida, where she wobbled in high heels and wore a fire-red bathing suit. She was a whole foot shorter than the two contestants on either side of her, despite her spiky beehive arduously teased and crowned high atop her head.

"Now, Miss Prissy Landrum, here is your question," said the squirmy little man with bad breath. "Can you tell us why Lake City, Florida, is called the gateway to the South?" She could hear the Jeopardy! music playing in her head as she concealed panic. "Um----I think, um----is it because we have the Lake City Junior College and Forest Ranger School?" she stuttered.

He burst out laughing, along with everyone else in the auditorium. She didn't win. She came in third, last, since there were only three contestants left standing. But she never forgot where she came from or what Lake City was known for. It is the gateway to the South because two major interstates meet there: I-10 and I-75. Who knew? More important, who cared?

Elrod is a free spirit, an artsy person. She has a small studio in her home, divided between two things: painting and writing. The painting came first. Her canvases are filled with children, landscapes, Florida, water, barns, and pets. She had never painted or had a lesson until she moved to Indianapolis in the year 2000. The painting came to her by chance, or maybe, by choice. No, actually, it was the parking.

Dale, her husband, worked a sixty-hour week. She was newly married and friendless in a big city. She couldn't get a real job because she flew back and forth between Tallahassee and Indianapolis every two weeks. She decided to make friends taking either art or writing classes: Indiana University had creative writing but horrible parking. The Indiana Art Institute had great parking. No brainer. She enrolled at the Indiana Art Institute for her first art class because of the parking. Crazy.

Watercolor, acrylic, and oil- she's done them all. Turned out, she had a tiny bit of talent. She started calling herself an artist, even dressed like one.

Writing came after painting. She awoke one morning with this yearning, a feeling surfaced from deep within. She had a story to tell. There is simply no other way to describe it. The date was April 20, her birthday. Her writing journey began that very day. Elrod never thought of herself as a writer, most certainly never an author. Like many things in life, writing evolved during the process of living.

Elrod knew enough to know she didn't know anything about writing. Dangling modifiers were as scary to her as standing on a stage in her bathing suit at another beauty pageant. Her major in college was speech pathology and audiology from Florida State University. She knew it was too science oriented to help when it came to writing. Heck, it didn't even help when her two daughters talked to each other in tongue. She had to pay a speech therapist.

So, if she wanted to be a writer, or call herself one, she knew she'd better learn the craft. Elrod registered in the school of self-taught learning. It would take four years before she finished her first book, after reading over forty-eight books on the craft of writing.

It has been an extraordinary journey. Elrod may never know where her urge to write came from, or really why. She is simply grateful it did.

5 Fun Facts You Didn't Know About Me:

1. I am very friendly and want to know everything about people I just met, and even find myself asking them strange questions.
2. I love medical shows that deal with a diagnosis of any kind and wish I had gone to medical school.
3. I stay up late at night, very late, and worry about things I cannot change but want to.
4. I truly believe you are what you eat and worry I have become a preacher and no one will want to eat with my anymore.
5. I thank God every night for my beautiful daughters, grand peeps, and perfect husband and wonder how can I be this lucky?

Synopsis for Far Outside the Ordinary

2-line Summary:

Far Outside the Ordinary is a poignant love story chronicling, in southern-style, the period in Prissy's life when, on an ordinary day, her young husband was given less than a year to live. It is also a story of happily-ever-after, a fairytale, and how it can come disguised and when least expected.

Short Synopsis:

If anybody had told Prissy, a Southern housewife, she would one day be driving with a stoned, drunk black man named Willie in her backseat while she begged him into her house for the night, she would've told them they were nuts. But it happened.

An emotionally honest account Far Outside the Ordinary chronicles the period in Prissy's life when her young husband is given less than a year to live. Southern black caregivers move into her home and work around the clock to aide her. Prissy finds herself a spectator in her own home, observing events far outside the boundaries of her once ordinary life. When her high school boyfriend reappears in her life, Prissy learns love has no expiration date. Sometimes a second chance at love can come disguised, and when least expected.

Medium Synopsis:

Long Synopsis:

As a conservative Southern housewife, if anybody had told Prissy she would one day be driving around town with a drunk, stoned black man named Willie sitting in her back seat while she begged-----no, ordered him into her house for the night, she would have told them they were nuts. But it happened.

Set in Tallahassee, Florida, Far Outside the Ordinary is a poignant love story chronicling, in southern-style, the period in Prissy's life when, on an ordinary day, her young husband was given less than a year to live during a routine physical where it was discovered he had brain cancer. She exhausted Western and Eastern life-saving treatments to save him, from medicine men to an FDA indicted doctor seen on Dateline. Both tragic and comic, the story is told from two sides of the same house: The back room where Boone, her beloved husband is dying, and the front room where his black caregivers, Cornelius Duhart, and Sallie Madison, are working around the clock to save their family. She stands in the middle, a spectator observing events far outside the boundaries of her once ordinary life.

This is a story of people from two cultures, black and white, and how love and respect for each other's differences grew from the work of supporting a man at the end of his life. The seriousness is tempered with humor, the pulling together of her community of friends and of strangers. The dire situations give permission for the crossing of class lines and help one realize we all have more similarities than differences.

Far Outside the Ordinary is also a story of happily-ever-after, a fairytale, and how it can come disguised and when least expected. When her high-school boyfriend reappeared in her life, she learned old love has no expiration date. There are second chances with a first love.

You may need to remind yourself that this is indeed a memoir while reading about angels of death, high fashion, world travel, shady medical clinics, political high-society, miracle treatments, and long-lost loves.

Reviews:

"I can't remember when I've read a book that captured both my heart and mind more than this one. Prissy Elrod's ability to weave a lifetime of living that embraced both the passion of love and the despair of loss with humility, humor, grace and raw honesty made me feel as though I was a member of her inner circle of family and friends. This book is about true love...twice found in the most unexpected and imaginative ways."

↵Steve Evans (IBM Retired Senior Executive Officer, Tallahassee, FL)

"The author's candor, as well as her often-quirky sense of humor, engages the reader as Ms. Elrod spins a tale of a sometimes desperate woman willing to try methods, far outside the ordinary, to fight her husband's disease. Laughter and tears are part and parcel of this memoir which is one of those books this reader did not want to put down until she had savored every last word."

5 Points of Interest about the Book's Content or Story:

1. A portion of the proceeds from the book have been donated to Fresh New Start which advocates refreshing and renewing young widows who have lost their husbands to cancer. For more information visit www.freshnewstart.org
2. Prissy Elrod is currently working on her second book.

Praise for Far Outside the Ordinary

"I can't remember when I've read a book that captured both my heart and mind more than this one. Prissy Elrod's ability to weave a lifetime of living that embraced both the passion of love and the despair of loss with humility, humor, grace and raw honesty made me feel as though I was a member of her inner circle of family and friends. This book is about true love...twice found in the most unexpected and imaginative ways."

☞ Steve Evans (IBM Retired Senior Executive Officer, Tallahassee, FL)

"Prissy Elrod is a talented writer far outside the ordinary. Her prose is unique, it sets her apart, defines her as a writer of immense talent. She will not go away. Her story will take you on a journey of tears, heartache, frustration, determination, and ultimately, triumph. This story needed to be told, she owed that to the world, at least that's the way I see it. Her characters are not only real, but vivid and compelling. Her family and friends became mine, her tears my tears, and her personal victory a shouting fest."

☞ Ronald G. Miller (Author, Amelia Island, Florida)

“The author’s candor, as well as her often-quirky sense of humor, engages the reader as Ms. Elrod spins a tale of a sometimes desperate woman willing to try methods, far outside the ordinary, to fight her husband's disease. Laughter and tears are part and parcel of this memoir which is one of those books this reader did not want to put down until she had savored every last word.”

“Although it is not typically the type of book most “guys” would read, I can tell you that I will recommend to every one of my buddies. Life is such a precious gift and we often times forget how it can all change so quickly. As husbands we sometimes forget to take time to appreciate how lucky we are to have such amazing wives and beautiful children.

☞ Jose Gonzalez (Director of State Affairs, Tallahassee, FL)

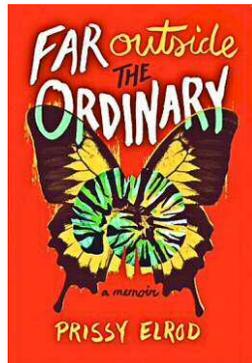

“The book's first half contrasted with its second is all-together a roller-coaster of emotion. The treacherous lows juxtaposed with glorious highs makes for a thrilling ride that kept this reader wanting more.”

☞ Nichole Healy (Writer, Clarkesville, GA)

Sample Chapter

Far Outside the Ordinary

By Prissy Elrod

Prologue:

The distinguished man of color standing on my front porch was a sight to behold. Debonair and slim, he was a conspicuous presence. He wore a fitted silk suit. A point of pink handkerchief peaked from his jacket pocket, matching the bright pink socks that crested above his black, pointed shoes. This gentleman was the very model of cultivated elegance and charm, looking as if he had been created in Hollywood.

Somehow my tragicomedy of a story had drifted from my little panhandle town in Florida all the way west to the coast of California, where he lived. Mary Barley, my friend and personal trainer, told a friend, and that friend told this man, who now wanted to meet me. He wanted to hear the firsthand version directly from me.

Mary came along with him, and after formal introductions, we all sat on my pink chintz couches. I was distracted by his socks, which matched the color of my couches perfectly.

"I write for a television series called Dawson's Creek," he told me. "Perhaps you've seen it."

I hadn't and told him. Television hadn't been on my radar for some time.

He continued. "My position, as one of their creative writers, is to create stories and story lines. Your story intrigued me. I'd sure like to hear more about it."

It was difficult to summarize the dramatic, unimaginable, and often unbelievable events that swirled around my attempt to save my dying husband after I moved two colorful, compassionate, black caregivers into my home. There had been a constant competition between tragedy and comedy, but I found myself relaxing as I spoke to this writer. It felt good, and I was astonished to discover I could tell someone—a stranger, no less—about those dark days.

As I began to wind down my narrative, I could sense what was coming next.

"Would you consider selling your story? I think it needs to be told," Mr. Dawson's Creek said. "You tell it, we'll write it, you get paid."

Before he even asked, I knew my answer would be no. What I said, however, was, "Thank you so much for the offer. I'll get back to you."

Of course, I never did get back to him. I was afraid those I cared about might be exploited in some way. I would have no control over their reputations. Even as a bruised magnolia from the South, I cared deeply for those who cared for me.

And so, I chose to tell my own story in my own way, thirteen years after the gentleman with the wonderful pink socks came to town. The why was so simple. In the words of Carl Hiaasen, one of my favorite Florida authors, "You just can't make this stuff up." Mr. Dawson's Creek was right. My story really did need to be told.

Dear (first name):

Leather Leaf Publishing is pleased to let you know about our newest title, Far Outside the Ordinary, written by Prissy Elrod. Readers will enjoy this poignant love story chronicling, in southern-style, the period in Prissy's life when, on an ordinary day, her young husband was given less than a year to live. It is also a story of happily-ever-after, a fairytale, and how it can come disguised and when least expected. When her high-school boyfriend reappeared in her life, she learned old love has no expiration date.

The author is an artist at heart and lives in Tallahassee, Florida with her husband. Writing her first novel, 'Far Out of the Ordinary' was an exercise of courage. It took four years to write, three computers, two espresso machines, 48 how-to writing books, a Florida State University memoir-writing class, 24 blog subscriptions, a half-dozen periodical journals and 14 revised drafts. Elrod kept the manuscript to herself, not allowing anyone to read it for the first three years of writing her story and finally, in 2013, she sent the draft to a Pushcart Prize-winning writer in Texas, engaging him to read the manuscript and provide feedback. Elrod is currently working on her second book.

"Prissy Elrod is a talented writer far outside the ordinary. Her prose is unique, it sets her apart, defines her as a writer of immense talent. She will not go away. Her story will take you on a journey of tears, heartache, frustration, determination, and ultimately, triumph. This story needed to be told, she owed that to the world, at least that's the way I see it. Her characters are not only real, but vivid and compelling. Her family and friends became mine, her tears my tears, and her personal victory a shouting fest."

— Ronald G. Miller (Author, Amelia Island, Florida)

We will continue to send review and media updates as they appear while the title is being considered. Thank you for your time and we look forward to setting up a sales presentation to discuss the book with you directly.
